Leading Self

Knowing Self Developing Self

Overview

A leader can be described in terms of their ability, experience, knowledge and personality. These qualities contribute to whether they lead well or not. We learn a lot by observing other people and comparing them with ourselves. This is mentoring. Through mentoring from positive role models we learn what works and what does not.

In this learning activity Participants explore leadership qualities through choosing a leader and describing their ability, experience, knowledge and personality.

NAME

Leader Stars

A good way of observing leadership in others is by looking at their ability, their experience, their knowledge and their personality. Think of a leader you know and answer the questions and statements below.

How capable is your leader?

Knowledge

How knowledgeable is your leader?

What are they able to	do really well?

How is your leader's knowledge useful to the people they lead?

The leader I am thinking about is:

How does your ability compare with their ability?

How do your knowledge and skills compare with their knowledge?
